Association for Geographic Information Foresight Project 2030

The Association for Geographic Information (AGI) has launched an exciting new project exploring the opportunities and challenges for the geospatial sector over the next five years.

Referencing previous Foresight Projects, the current work has starting with a wide-reaching survey aimed at identifying biggest themes, influences and developments, that will impact geospatial to 2030. Additional input will be sourced from stakeholders working in government, commerce, academia, and research, in the form of one-to-one interviews, and the results of these will be published in an independent report later in the year. This report will be formally launched at a dedicated event at the Royal Geographical Society (with IBG) on the 13th November 2025.

“Foresight projects take big, cross-cutting issues, summarise the evidence, and explore future opportunities,” commented Peter ter Haar, Co-Chair of the Association for Geographic Information. “We have undertaken similar projects back in 2010 and 2015, so, as we sit on the verge of both an exciting technological future and an uncertain political and environmental landscape, this year seemed a logical time to revisit this activity.

“We want to engage with the geospatial community, and wider spheres of influence, to garner as much feedback as possible with as many opinions and experiences as feasible, and we hope the final report will be a valuable resource for those working within, and alongside, geospatial to inform strategic decision making and understand potential opportunities.”

In addition to feedback from the survey, and content from ongoing peer interviews, the AGI is also looking for organisations to the support the publication of the final report, and the launch event. With a range of sponsorship options available to both existing and prospective members of the AGI, this is great opportunity to get involved and support this future shaping project.

“As a membership organisation, run by volunteers for the good of the sector, it is only with support from the sector that we can undertake ambitious projects like this. So, on behalf of the AGI thank you in advance.”

The Association for Geographic Information is an independent and impartial organisation that represents the UK geospatial sector. Working with members and the wider community, the Association successfully works alongside government policy makers, delivers professional development opportunities and provides a lead for best practice across the industry. Established in 1990, members of the Association for Geographic Information enjoy unrivalled networking opportunities, a framework to learn new skills and the support to progress professional development.
